White and Black Felt Model

Smart Shape for Second Mourning

IN THESE days mourning wear is not necessarily somber. The most fashionable mourning is relieved by a bit of white or a great deal of white, as the wearer prefers; but to be really smart there is a note of white somewhere in the frock, and especially in the hat. Very elderly women may wear all-black, but the young and middle-aged need the enlivening touch of white. All-black is usually worn to a funeral, but immediately after that day the black-and-white mourning may be worn with perfect propriety.

One would not wish for a more charming hat than the white-edged, broad-brimmed model, with its dome crown of pleated chiffon cloth. This smart hat can be made at home with very little trouble. The top of the crown is finished by a very flat button about the size of a quarter dollar and covered with the chiffon cloth. The brim is covered with the unpleated chiffon cloth and the edge bound with white silk crepe anglaise. At the side is placed a white crepe flower. It is possible to make this flower by cutting several large petals from the crepe and fastening them together to form a rose-like flower with loose petals. The edges of the petals are left raw.

The picture hat edged with white marabou is made of dull black silk stretched over a buckram frame. This hat is for the woman who, though in mourning, does not believe in giving up all gaieties, or at least quiet social functions, during the period of mourning. A large cream-white silk rose rests on the left side of the hat at the joining of brim and crown.

Grace of line is very evident in the large-brimmed hat of dull black felt having about it a drapery of white mousseline and reminding one of the draped straw helmet worn by the tourist in India. The edge of the black felt brim is simply bound in white mousseline to correspond with the crown drapery. This hat may be worn by the girl of sixteen or the woman of forty.

A charming model for the woman who prefers the long mourning veil is the small, close-fitting model of white mousseline stretched over white silk. The veil is quite two yards and a half in length and about twenty-seven inches wide. This is twisted skillfully about the bare hat, loosely knotted, fastened at the back and allowed to hang down as far as the knees. One end should hang from eight to twelve inches below the chin. The veil shown is of black mousseline, but it may be of silk crepe anglaise if the latter material is preferred.

Black-and-white felt is an excellent combination for the young girl who must wear mourning. The white sailor with its upturned brim and facing of black is cleverly trimmed with a broad band of white grograin ribbon sloped down at the side to meet a bow of black sateen.

The chic black-and-white hat with a rosette at the side and having about the crown a black feather fantasia of burnt ostrich is more appropriate for second mourning than for the first year, owing to its lack of simplicity. The shape is of felt, the upper being white and the facing of the brim being of black felt. Black grograin ribbon forms the pleated rosette. Its center is a button covered with white grograin silk.

The new white fabric hats of taffeta, bengaline and faille silk are simply trimmed and appropriate for mourning wear. Some have black stenciling, black and white flowers, clusters of white and purple berries and other modest adornment that strikes the happy medium between conservatism and decorative beauty. These hats will pave the way for the early straws. They are light weight, are to be had in all shapes and add a fresh, bright crown to any costume.

There are little hatpins especially designed for mourning millinery. Combinations of small pearls and dull jet are good; amethysts and pearls and black-and-purple enamel are also in favor. And, following the sensible edict, these hatpins are short.

Beads in the black-and-white porcelain form will be used on felt, fabric and straw. They are decorative but not obtrusive. Altogether, the mourning hat can be very attractive.

Mourning wear is receiving more consideration in the shops at the present time than ever before. The result is a charming assortment of hats and garments from which to select.

OUR NEW STORY.

On Monday the Times publishes the first instalment of a new story. It is the tale of a pair of babes whose parents in life have been their enemies. Their story is a tale of love and hate, of triumph and defeat, of the triumph of love over hate, of the triumph of love over hate, of the triumph of love over hate.
